DECIDES TO SUE HER INDIAN.

MISS BOWLES OF ROANOKE, VA., SUGGESTS $100,000.

Makes Charles Stanley Johnson, Whom She says She Met at the Waldorf, Defendant in the Suit-Says He Promised Both to Marry Her and to Pray for Her.

Virginia H. Bowles of Roanoke, Va., has now begun a suit in the Supreme Court to recover $100,000 damages from Charles Stanley Johnson, a business man with large interests in this city, Chicago and Monongahela, Pa. Miss Bowles alleges that he falsely represented himself to her to be a single man, and, on the strength of these representations, made violent love to her, with the result, as she avers, that he induced her to drink with him and subsequently to live with him under the promise that he would make her his wife. She does not sue for breach of promise, but for damages for "the fraudulent representations and for assault."

Miss Bowles says she was born at Roanoke eighteen and a half years ago, and lived there until May 30, 1901, when she came to New York to reside with her aunt, Mrs. Margaret Cheeks. In the affidavit that she has prepared for her counsel, A. H. Hummel, she declares that she first met Johnson on Dec. 16, 1903, at the Waldorf. when she was introduced to him by friend. The time of the meeting was about 5 in the afternoon, and Johnson, she says, suggested that the party adjourn to the hotel billiard room. There, she swears, at his request and persuasion, she tasted intoxicating liquors for the first time in her life. While the drinking was going on, she continues, he invited her to dine with him and suggested that they take in a show later. She replied that she would have to obtain her aunt's consent first, and he agreed to call for her at her Consent being obtained, they drove down to the Herald Square Hotel, where they had dinner. During the meal, Miss Bowles says, at his earnest solicitation, she drank two or three cocktails, and aferward Johnson took her to see Maxine I lliott in "Her Own Way." In the midst of the performance she became very ill, and asked him to take her home. He refused, she says, and persuaded her to see the show through. When they left the theatre, however, she became worse, and Johnson took her to a nearby drug store, where he bought some medicine for her. But instead of improving, she got sicker still, and then, she declares, he advised her to walk around to the Herald Square Hotel, where she sat in the ladies' parlor until she lost conscious-

She knew nothing more, she says, until the next morning, when she woke up to He Slept Well for a Number of Hours and find herself in a bedroom with Johnson. "I upbraided him for what he had done, runs the affidavit, "and he begged my forgiveness, stating that he loved me dearly, that he was a single man and that he would make me his wife within a short time."

would make me his wife within a short time."
Relying upon this promise, she accompanied him to Philadelphia and Pittsburg (where he bought her a wedding ring), and then they put up at the Wolfendale Hotel, Allegheny, Pa., for five days as Mr. and Mrs. Ford. From time to time, she says, she asked him to fulfil his promise and marry her, but he put her off persistently with the plea that business matters rendered it impossible just then.

He told her at Allegheny that business compelled him to go to Wilkesbarre, and when she insisted that she would have to accompany him, he refused, finally explaining that he was a married man with a family. She cried, she says, and he tried to console her with the assurance that he was going to get a divorce and would marry her as soon as he could obtain his freedom through the courts. Then she returned to New York and he went on to Wilkesbarre.

On paturning home she confessed all to her aunt, and then telegraphed to Johnson, asking him to come on and see Mrs. Cheeks.

Johnson did so, and repeated that he would her aunt, and then telegraphed to Johnson, asking him to come on and see Mrs. Cheeks. Johnson did so, and repeated that he would shortly be free to marry her. During the next few weeks, she says, she received a number of very affectionate letters from Johnson, several of which, not signed by his name, she attaches to her affidavit. One reads in part:

MY OWN DEAR LITTLE GIRL I am not going home to-night, but am working at the office and thinking of the dearest and sweetest girl in the whole world. Can you guess who she is? Will tell you when I see you the next time. Be a dear, good girl and write to me just as often as you can, for no one will get the letters but me * * Lots of love and little Northern kisses. As ever,

When I retire to-night I am going to say a little prayer for you and one for myself, and hope that the time will soon come when we can see each other again. I thank you. Virginia dear, for each kind and thoughtful set, for I feel that you were more than kind to me, all of which makes me care more and more for you each time I see you.

Do not worry about the little Indian, for he has changed his mind since the first time he met the very sweetest and nicest little girl that ever came from the sunny south and the little Indian is true blue.

My Dear Little Sweetheart: I think Auntie Margaret is about the kindest and sweetest aunt in the world, and I would like very much to see her married to some fine man who would be as kind and true to her as I am sure she would be to him.

Now, darling mine, write to me about the music teacher, and also tell me how many hours each day you are going to devote to your cash account and write it up each day, and be awfully good to Auntie Margaret. Please do not think, sweetheart mine, that I am trying to be boss, for you know that I am willing for my dear little Virginia to be the one who shall control my future happiness, and my only thought is that her dear life shall always be full of happiness and that she will try each day to learn something that will tend to elevate and improve her mind, and, by so doing, make some one very happy who thinks she is the dearest and sweetest girl in the whole world.

So I will say good-night to you my darling, with lots of Southern kisses to my dear one. Cindest regards to Auntie Margaret, and all my love to the dearest and sweetest girl in the whole.

My Own Darling Virginia: Darling, my every thought is for you and you must never think of my being untrue to you, dear, for it is impossible. It is quite enough for me to know that I love you with all my heart, and that my sweetheart cares for me, and I hope some day to have all her love, for I do not think it possible for my darling to love this little Indian as he loves her. I have simply met the one girl in the whole world for me, and I know it, and while our friend Herman may do a lot of talking about his love for you, I am sure time will prove whether or not I love my darling. I hope and trust, my dear little girl will always love and care for me, her sweetheart, and that our lives may be as happy as true love and perfect confidence in each other can possibly make them.

I trust and hope that my darling may be as happy as I am in my first true love for a dear little Southern girl, and with kindest regards to auntie, from your own loving little Indian.

miss Bowles says that in March last she went on to Chicago, where she stayed until July. Johnson visited her there at the Strafford Hotel, and again renewed his promise to make her his wife as soon as possible. He left her for Wilkesbarre, and she has not seen him since. Last summer she had the case before the District Attorney's office here, there being at that time a quarrel, apparently, over the custody of the girl. Johnson has not yet entered any answer to her allegations.

MR. PAYNE IS MUCH BETTER,

BUT IS STILL IN A CRITICAL CON-DITION.

His Heart Action Has Improved-Bu Dr. Osler Says "He Is Not Yet Out of the Woods"-The President Calls Again

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 .- The critical illness of Postmaster-General Henry C. Payne, which has caused the gravest apprehension since Thursday afternoon, took a slight turn for the better this morning. The patient slept quietly the greater part of last night, although his sleep was occasionally broken by spells of restlessness At 9 o'clock this morning, however, the doctors issued the statement that there was a marked improvement in Mr. Payne's condition. They added that his illness was still critical.

Dr. William Osler of Baltimore, who was called into consultation on the case vesterday, made an early morning visit to his patient, and when he came from the

The 9 o'clock bulletin, which was signed by Drs. Osler, Magruder and Rixey, was as follows:

"Mr. Payne passed a much better night Slept well for a number of hours; heart action much improved; general condition more favorable.

President Roosevelt walked over to the Arlington shortly before 10 o'clock to make inquiries, and he expressed much gratification when he was told that Mr. Payne had passed a good night and was resting quietly. Many other persons prominent in official and social life called during the morning, and the stream of visitors continued during the afternoon. Among them were nearly all the members of the Cabinet, former Secretary of State John W. Foster, the Assistant Postmasters-General and many

Miss Louise Jones, the Postmaster-General's niece, who has been a member of his immediate household for the greater part of the time for several years, arrived from Milwaukee this afternoon, in response to the message which was sent out to the relatives Thursday night. Mrs. Cameron of Jamestown, N. Y., Mr. Payne's sister, is here also. On account of the Postm aster-General's weak condition and the necessity is here also. On account of the Postm aster-General's weak condition and the necessity of guarding him against the least excitement, no one except Mrs. Payne had been allowed to see him until this morning. Soon after the morning consultation of the physicians to-day, however, Mrs. Cameron entered the sickroom and exchanged a few words with her brother.

Although Mr. Payne passed a better night than the physicians had expected, and was accordingly much brighter this morning, much stress is laid on the statement that he is still in a critical condition, and that any apparent improvement may prove to be quite superficial. The heart action was better to-day, but it is still weak and gives the doctors much concern. The nature of his illness is such that it is impossible to predict results with confidence.

Another consultation of doctors was held at 3 o'clock. No formal bulletin was issued, but Dr. Magruder said:

"The Postmaster-General is much better to-day. He has taken nourishment readily and retained all that has been given. His condition is improved, but is still serious."

In a bulletin issued at 8 o'clock, signed by Doctors G. Lloyd Magruder and C. T. Grayson, the condition of Postmaster-General Payne was thus described:

"Mr. Payne has been very restless this afternoon. Is not as well as this morning, but has continued to take nourishment the entire day. He responds well to the remedies employed. Condition still very ser-

At 9 o'clock the physicians announced un-officially that Mr. Payne was considerably better than when the bulletin was issued, as he was sleeping and was not restless

The Weather.

The storm travelling out of the St. Lawrence Valley became severe yesterday and caused high winds in the lower Lake section and thence east-ward over the Middle Atlantic and New England coasts and to a considerable distance over the North Atlantic Ocean. The winds were blowing offshore. The pressure was high over all the interior, with the centre over the eastern Rocky Mountain slope, and was moving eastward, forcing oler weather in its front over all the States cast of the Mississippi. The coolness caused showers in Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri. Elsewhere the weather was fair.
